Low-fi

I added a separate cart, checkout, and receipt page as a process funnel with breadcrumbs to allow the user to return to previous pages for user control and visibility of status as the user would be able to see which steps would be coming up for them as they submitted their order.

I added a sliding notification panel as a change from the previous idea for a small popup as the popup was easy to miss and hard to position within different aspect ratios. This new design would also allow the user to see more details of their cart without having to specifically open up their cart.
